Sarah (Juba) Addison learned the art of storytelling from her grandmother Sarah Jane, a descendant of West African Griots. She is dedicated to performing, preserving, and promoting traditional storytelling for people of all ages and cultures. Juba entertains audiences of adults, families, and children with her repertoires of folklore, fables and fairy tales, plus historical and inspirational stories. Juba encourages everyone to tell his or her story. Everyone has a story and by telling/ sharing your stories, you form a bridge for others to cross and get to know you, your culture and most importantly your history. Juba has performed at White Sands Monument, Fort Seldon, National Story League

Convention, Border Book Festival in New Mexico, and Chamizal Festival in El Paso Texas. Juba's mission statement is I share what I know so that others may grow.

Cisco Guevara is a local storytelling legend and owner of Los Rios River Runners and multigenerational New Mexican and has participated in the Taos Storytelling Festival since its inception. He draws his outrageously true stories from his Hispanic and Indian heritage, and from his dynamic experience as a river guide over the last quarter century.
