

LIVINGSTON PRESS

In this Cloud Atlas-style speculative novel, humans are the alien invaders. The reader learns through many documents—police reports, legal depositions, speech transcripts, and diary entries—that a human company named HealthCorp has attempted to enslave two alien species: the Laffians stranded on a planet-wide ocean and the feline HoFe living on a bed of hofellium. Now, these same aliens have come to Earth in the hopes of safely repopulating. The question becomes whether these three groups can reconcile on Earth without killing each other first. . . .
NOVEMBER, $19.95

N
E
W

When her step-grandmother dies of cancer in 1970, 15-year-old Eli Burnes runs away with a draft-dodger, thinking she's on the road to adventure and romance. Instead she's embroiled in a world of underground Weathermen, Black Power revolutionaries, snitches, and shoot-first police. Eventually Eli is rescued by her father, who turns out both more responsible and more revolutionary than she'd imagined. But when he gets in trouble with the law, she finds herself on the road again, searching for the allies who will help her learn how to save herself.
SEPTEMBER 15, $19.95

Peter Sanguedolce is fighting to save shared custody rights of his daughter only to begin questioning much darker motives of his wife's new husband. As he unravels this web, Peter becomes caught in a quest to fulfill his dying friend's wish to be reconciled with his estranged daughter, a woman whom Peter once—and possibly still does—love.
AUGUST $19.95

This Tartt First Fiction Award Winner is a zinger. You want dark comedy? You got it. You want outlandish situations? You got 'em. In fact, you have two hands full. Never fear, you will also get bellyfuls of laughs. No time for gloom here.
MAY $18.95

T
I
T
L
E
S

The first complete translation of Merlin of the Woods! How can the writings of a 5th century poet/prophet speak to us moderns? Page after page of battles and death answer that succinctly.
OCTOBER $17.95